Also, to add to my other questions, could it be possible to choose fonts and font colors on Home Base like on here? I know for a lot of people, especially in Roleplays, that using certain colors and fonts for PoVs is incredibly important and helpful, as well as fun. So, maybe try adding that, too?

Just for now, the best solution would be to GIVE US MORE TIME.As you yourself said, home base is not compadable on very many platforms. To those who can't use home base yet, the safest option for everyone would be to leave up the forums until you are assured that it really works on a vast majority of devices.

@Becky - thanks for updating the system! I can't wait for all the new features on Home Base. But as someone who has access to everything needed to use Home Base easily, my future prospects are looking considerably more optimistic than other's. But despite my favorable outlook, I have both a request and an question.
Request: I know others have mentioned it, and you yourself are in favor of it, but please add a signature feature! I really would enjoy not being called "Flyingpig" all the time, or having fellow forumers not recognize me on HB.
Question: How is the main page format of the Newsfeed & the Wings of Fire section (that is the Message Board replacement, right?) going to be different from that of the WoFMB? I'm worried that I won't be able to find my fellow forumers or their posts on there, or keep up on the RP/FWRPs.

mod becky, is there any way to have a web-mobile version of the forums available? even if it's a bad mini-forum with slow modding, it'd probably allow for some people to be on more. some people can't download the app or go on the computer version at all, so having at least some small sembalance of communication for those people who can't access homebase.

I can't accept I'll only be able to see a few of my friends from here from now on. No forums--no SAMB or WoFMB. Home Base doesn't work on any device I have, including the library.

I really do appreciate how many others will be blessed by this change, and maybe...that means I need to use civic virtue. That it's better for all others other than myself and a few.

Home Base takes away two things I have loved even from the start, from joining it two years ago.

One of these is that it's super easy to find. We have tons of new people coming in every week who have found the site and have decided to join it. You look up wings of fire, interested to join the fandom, and you find it. Home Base is going to be literally impossible for new people find. Most likely, it'll be on the app store, wherever it is on computers, and via search. But you're going to look for "Home Base" if you actually want to find it online. If you look up wings of fire, it most likely won't appear at the top. In the app store, it doesn't LOOK related to the fandoms at a glace, so it'll be most likely skipped over. One of your key points was to expand the forum, but eventually it'll start decreasing rapidly and be completely gone.

The second thing is that nobody judges anyone based on their art skills, looks, etc. Here at the fandom, you can only be judged by your personality, as it should be. With sharing videos, some people (ie trolls) might harass someone for their voice, looks, art skills, etc. It's basically inevitable. There will also be a much higher chance of trolls on apps then on a website. This is, in fact, a proven theory.

I truly believe that deleting the forums is a mistake. Sorry, but I think this comment is a little harsh. I'm still going to say it.

So many of us have so much trouble accessing Home Base. It crashes everytime I try to leave a minigame! By deleting the forums you are stopping so many of us from being able to know eachother and to continue being friends. I can see a lot of complaints, and some praise, but if you truly want the tranisition to be good, don't drop it on is like this. A month isn't enough time. We're in full on panic mode!

Is it really so hard to get rid of Phil and find a new working filter? Or make a new filter?

You are stripping away some of our links to a place to feel normal. We can actually be someone we can't always be when we're face to face with the people who try to bring us down. I know I first joined this place to have fun but it soon became a link. A link to a community that accepted me for who I am. With Home Base the avatars make me feel like the troubles of life are coming back.

This change is too sudden to cope with. We have a month left to say goodbye and wrap up all of our chats with those who can't get on Home Base. It is not fair. Sure, life isn't fair but you can change this.

#KeepTheForums

Also sorry about the harshness of this.

I mean, some way or another. I understand a read-only forum, and I understand that long term read-only might look a bit sloppy, but if only there was some way to keep the old forums in some sort of archive.

Honestly though, this is why I've never trusted Netflix and don't buy movies digitally, because if the system changes or is removed, you may loose all of your things on there as well. If I own a movie or book, even if they stop publishing it, or delete it from all their systems, I still have my own copy of the DVD or book, and I don't plan on loosing that anytime soon.

I understand that Phil needs to be retired... But, why not do filtering the old fashioned way? Many people on here will never see others again because they can't access homebase. Why must you delete it? We can deal with Phil. We can be patient. Well, I think we can. I see no point in destroying what people take joy in.

Some people, and by some I am referring to me, just won't be able to handle watching their memories die. If you must, freeze it, but please, please don't destroy it. Many people will be destroyed along with it.

I also feel like having an individual forum for each series makes the forum feel like it's linked specifically to that series, that this is the Wings of Fire website, and this is the Wings of Fire forum. To combine them all on Home Base, even if there is a filter, it no longer feels like this is the forum for Wings of Fire, or 39 Clues, or whatever series you love, but rather a collective Scholastic forum that misses the individuality of each series.
